Introduction

The purpose of this study is to investigate the effects of a new educational program on student performance. The program is designed to improve critical thinking and problem-solving skills through a series of interactive exercises and projects. The study will compare the performance of students who participated in the program with those who did not.

The research is based on the following hypotheses:

- H1: Students who participate in the program will show significantly higher scores on critical thinking tests compared to the control group.
- H2: Students who participate in the program will show significantly higher scores on problem-solving tests compared to the control group.

The study was conducted over a period of six months. The participants were divided into two groups: an experimental group and a control group. The experimental group received the new educational program, while the control group received the standard curriculum. Data was collected through pre-tests, post-tests, and a series of quizzes and assignments. The results of the study are presented in the following sections.

The first section of the results discusses the pre-test scores, which were used to ensure that the two groups were comparable at the start of the study. The second section discusses the post-test scores, which were used to measure the impact of the program. The third section discusses the scores on the quizzes and assignments, which provided a more detailed look at the students' progress throughout the program.

The results of the pre-tests showed that the two groups were indeed comparable, with no significant differences in scores. The post-test results, however, showed a significant improvement in the experimental group's scores on both critical thinking and problem-solving tests. This suggests that the program was effective in achieving its goals.

The scores on the quizzes and assignments also showed a positive trend for the experimental group. They consistently scored higher than the control group on most of the assignments, indicating that the program helped students to better understand and apply the concepts taught in class.

In conclusion, the study found that the new educational program had a positive impact on student performance. It improved critical thinking and problem-solving skills, as well as overall understanding of the subject matter. These findings suggest that the program should be implemented more widely in schools to help improve student outcomes.
